MESSAGE

Through the progress of science, technological advances and the resources of the modern world; our Continent, we have not become better, happier people. We have not developed our capacity to love and feel responsible for the misery of the Continent.

The world, like our Continent, has gone through a historic period of rapid transition in this millennium. However, faced with the painful realities of the social, economic and political problems that our continent faces, we realize how necessary it is to focus on strengthening our families because they are the ones who ensure the well-being of the Continent and the world.

More fundamentally still, the current Era of impersonal materialism must give way to a new Era built on selfless service for the benefit of the Continent or others.
